Realm is a gracefully flared serif typeface that was developed since mid 2021, initially as a non-exclusive commissioned project for Elicyon, an interior design consultancy based in London. It takes inspiration in a disparate selection of old English engraved and hand-painted pieces of lettering and merges proportions based on Roman capitals with loops and flourishes borrowed from round-hand calligraphy. These elements sum up a typeface well suited for headlines while a tall x-height and large, open counters makes it a viable option for running text as well. Realm's weights range from Thin to Heavy.

| About the foundry | Approximate Type is an independent Danish type foundry located in Copenhagen. Founded in 2021, the foundry is run as a one-man-endeavour by Kasper Pyndt Rasmussen.The foundry develops retail typefaces as well as bespoke typefaces for a range of clients between culture and commerce. The overarching ethos of the foundry is to develop typefaces that feel familiar, yet original. To strike a balance between past and present through letterforms that are aware of their origins, while respectfully questioning them. |
| A note on the name | The word “approximate” is defined as something “close to, but not completely similar”. With this in mind, Approximate Type acknowledges that no type is drawn in a vacuum, but exists inside a wide spectrum of references—historical as well as contemporary, known as well as subconscious. At the same time, the name (in all its glorious imprecision) represents a sense of irony or down-to-earthness in an industry that is rightfully—but sometimes overly—concerned with details. |
