Dote is a rounded serif typeface that echoes the American spirit of the late 19th century, or the Central European flavour of the 1920s, or the Scandinavian line of the mid-20th century, or the Italian touch of the 1930s. Its roots are not clear. Indeed, if history in general, and that of typography in particular, is made up of migrations, appropriations, often inexplicable misunderstandings, Dote typeface is the living witness of these evolutions.

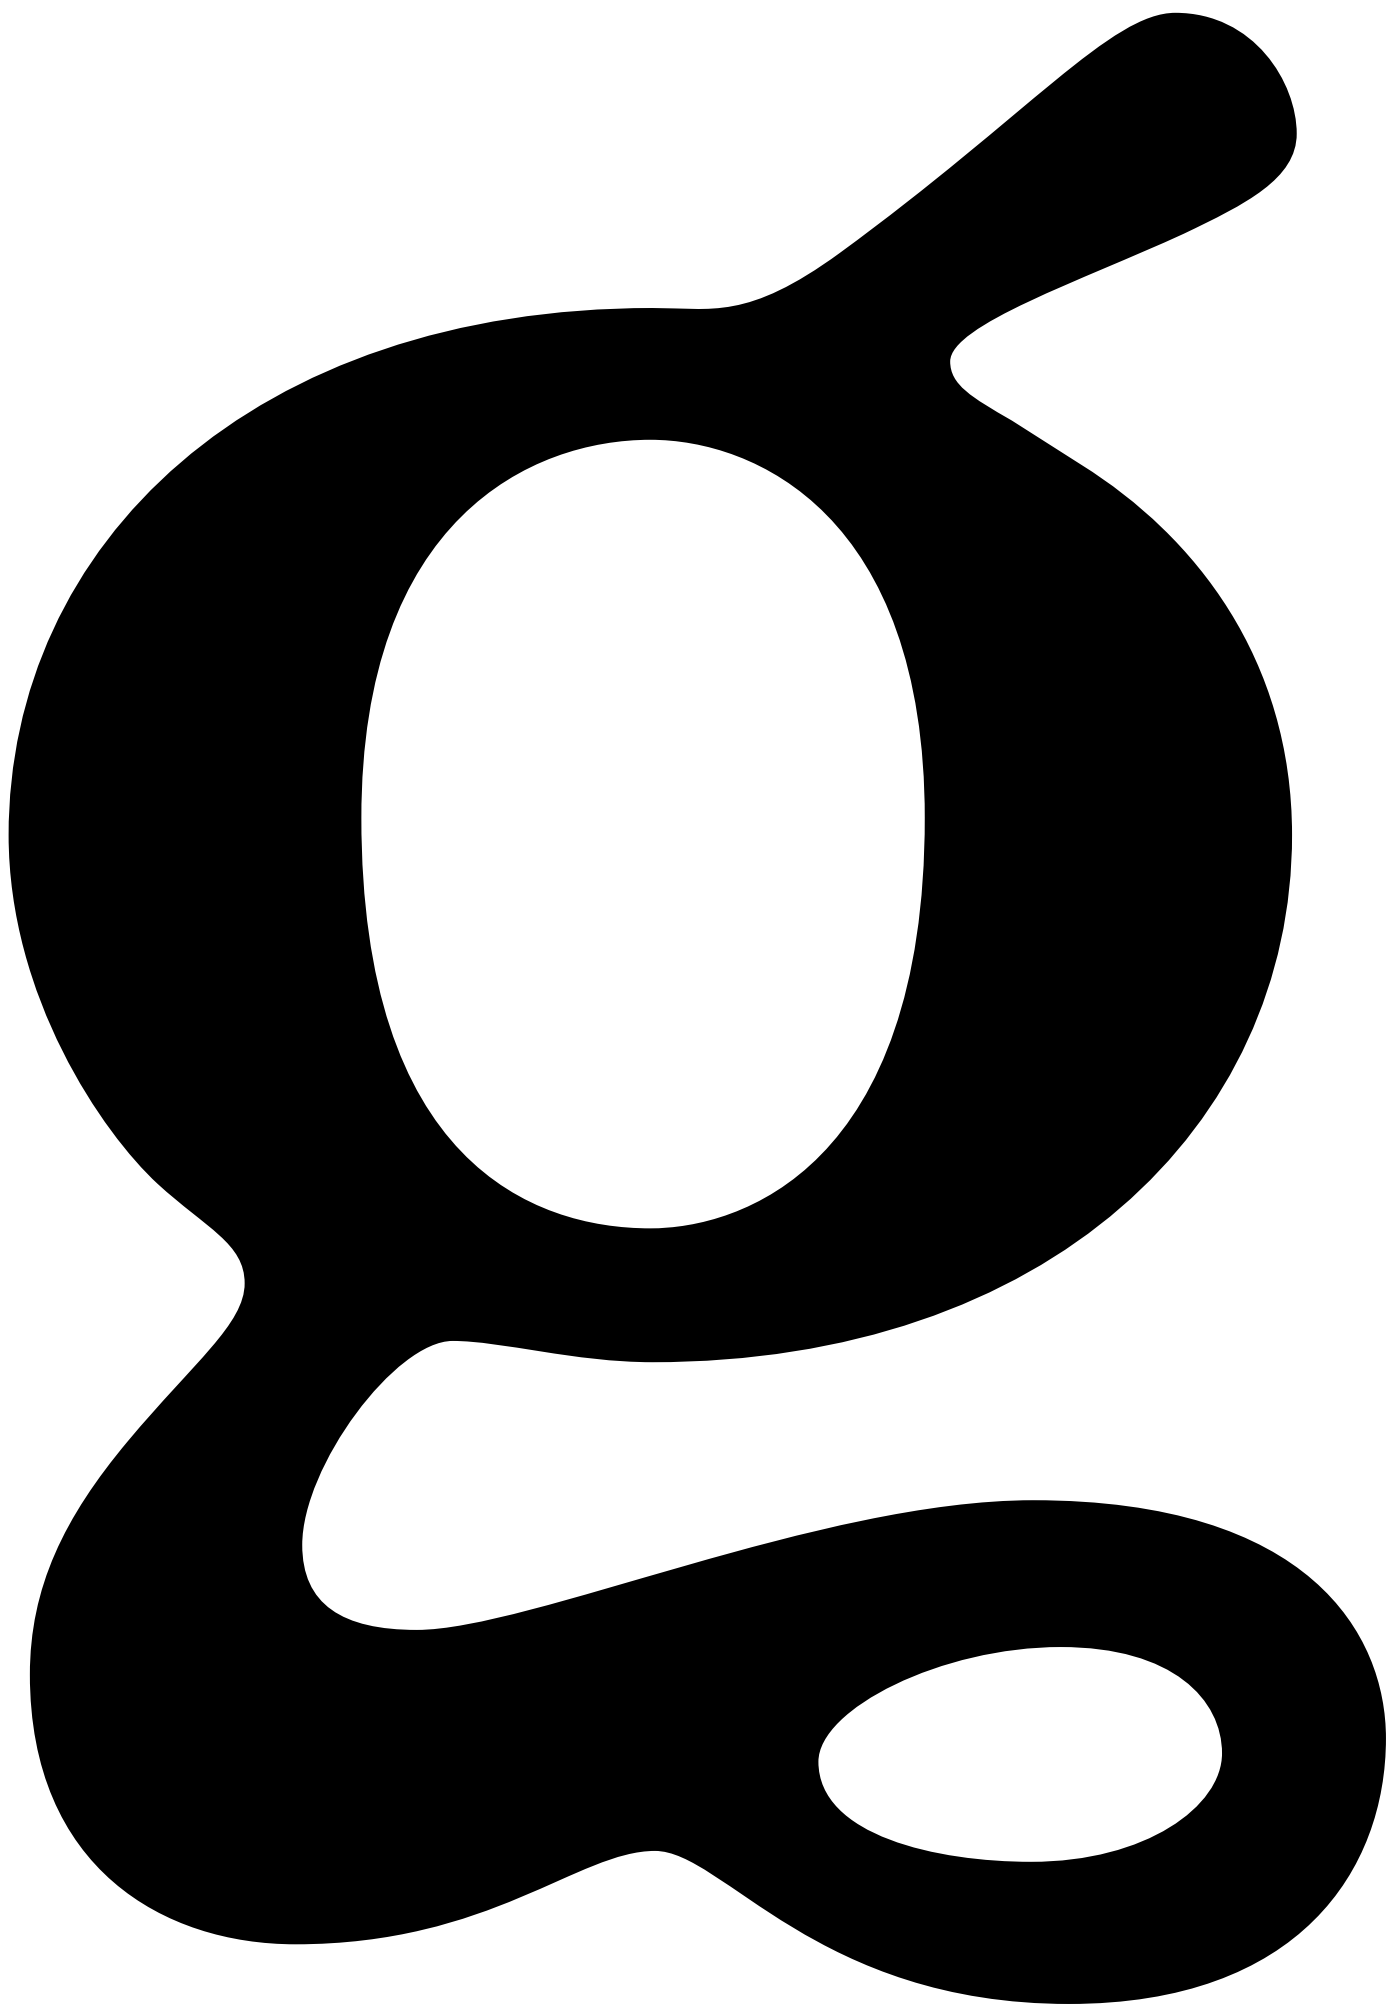

Created as a custom typeface for an Italian collective of women weavers – Dote Textiles –, it uses the interweaving metaphor to declare the origin of the design of its letters. Dote's core design features are based on an alphabet from a mid-twentieth-century typefoundry catalogue of the Xilografia Veronese – Italy – named as Svezia – Italian for Sweden. Indeed, wandering in Swedish flea markets and loppis, a traces of similar typefaces emerged, including an alphabet named Sarotti Heimansskrift.

Sarotti was in fact one of the patrons of the German poster artist Julius Gipkens, who in the 1920s and 1930s designed a series of letters and alphabets for various clients including the Sarotti chocolate brand. Gipkens was linked to the typical Sachplakat style present in Central European advertising in the first half of the 20th century. One of the main exponents of the Sachplakat style is Lucien Bernhard, who in the 1910s designed Bernhard Antiqua, a forerunner of the Svezia and Sarotti Heimansskrift in some ways. Issued by Flinsch and later Bauer in nine styles Bernhard Antiqua was influenced not only by the aesthetics of the alphabet designed by Peter Behrens around 1907 for AEG but also by the typeface Windsor designed in 1905 by Elisha Pechey.

As printer, bookbinder and type designer, Pechey seems to import into the English context what had happened in the typographic ferment around American newspapers in the late 19th and early 20th century. Indeed it was in 1900 that E. J. Kitson designed the Post Oldstyle Roman for the Saturday Evening Post.

Into this ping pong of references comes the typeface Dote, which, starting with the typeface Svezia, becomes the last thread added to this web of names, alphabets and migrations that is typographic history.

On a conventional loom, continuous weft thread is carried on a pirn, in a shuttle that passes through the shed.

A handloom weaver could propel the shuttle by throwing it from side to side with the aid of a picking stick. The “picking” on a power loom is done by rapidly hitting the shuttle from each side using an overpick or underpick mechanism.

Stoffe und Materialien: Wolle

Die vorgeschichtlichen Menschen, die Schaffelle zur Kleidung nutzten, lernten möglicherweise im Neolithikum nach und nach, daraus Garn und Gewebe aus den Fellhaaren herzustellen.

Die selektiv züchterische Schafhaltung eliminierte dann nach und nach die langen und groben Haare der schützenden äußeren Deckschicht, so dass schließlich ein Fell entstand, das nur noch aus dem weichen, isolierenden Vlies der ehemaligen Unter-schicht mit ihren feinen Wollfasern bestand.

Über die Anfänge der Wollgewinnung und -verarbeitung in Europa weiß man nur wenig, da sich Wolle als organisches Material mit Ausnahme der Feuchtboden-funde in Seesiedlungen unter europäischen Klima-bedingungen nicht lange im Boden hält. Es stehen hier somit nur archäo-zoologische Befunde zur Verfügung, die sich vor allem auf den neu auftauchenden markanten Größenunterschied der Skelettreste von Schafen beziehen verglichen mit den bisherigen Schafrassen. Zuerst gilt dies für die Funde im Karpatenbecken der Badener Kultur.
