Cure Sans

Regular 20pt

The fist version of Cure Sans had only the monospace styles. In terms of a commercial release I started feeling that the mono alone was too limiting especially with a relatively neutral design.

The family has now been expanded to include a proportional sans with italics in three widths that share the same design DNA as the original Cure Mono.

Cure Sans has a neutral overall feel on the surface but the details blend a subtle mix of mechanical and classical shapes. There are just enough personal detailing that gives the typeface its own voice. It’s meant to be a workhorse but also fun, interesting and inviting to look at. Neutral but not sterile, inviting and not cold.

Cure Sans has seven weights in each widtg from Extralight to Black to ensure a large enough typographic palette for various use cases and the original Mono of course. That’s a total of 49 styles.

THE STONE ROSES: The Full Story of Spike Island, 25 Years On

Regular 25pt

The Stone Roses is now considered one of the greatest British albums, although the band themselves were unhappy with the sound on the album, Squire describing it as “twee” and not “fat or hard enough”.

Regular 11pt

In March 1995, just two weeks before a tour in support of Second Coming was due to begin, Reni exited the band, following a disagreement with Ian Brown. A replacement drummer was found in Robbie Maddix, who had previously worked with Rebel MC. Also recruited around this time for the live shows was the session-keyboardist/programmer Nigel Ipinson, who had previously played with the band on the “Chic Remix” re-working of “Begging You” for its release as a single. A secret “come-back” tour of the UK was planned for April 1995 but cancelled after the music press announced the dates. A major blow was the cancellation of their engagement at the Glastonbury Festival in June 1995. John Squire had suffered a mountain-biking accident in northern California weeks before the show, breaking his collarbone. The band finally organised a full UK tour for November and December 1995 and all dates sold out in a day. Squire announced his departure on 1 April 1996, releasing a

The first published usage of the phrase “new brutalism” occurred in 1953, when Alison Smithson used it to describe a plan for their unbuilt Soho house which appeared in the November issue of Architectural Design. She further stated: “It is our intention in this building to have the structure exposed entirely, without interior finishes wherever practicable.” The Smithsons’ Hunstanton School completed in 1954 in Norfolk, and the Sugden House completed in 1955 in Watford, represent the earliest examples of new brutalism in the United Kingdom.

Hunstanton school, likely inspired by Mies van der Rohe’s 1946 Alumni Memorial Hall at the Illinois Institute of Technology in Chicago, United States, is notable as the first completed building in the world to carry the title of “new brutalist” by its architects. At the time, it was described as “the most truly modern building in England” The term gained increasingly wider recognition when British architectural historian Reyner Banham used it to identify both an ethic and aesthetic style, in his 1955 essay The New Brutalism.
